The period which exactly synchronises with the architectural history of S. Peter's at Rome was a period of the greatest activity the world has ever seen in the art of Architecture. It embraces the whole history of the great Gothic schools, from their rise upon the ruins of Imperial Rome to their submergence beneath that revival of ancient classical forms accomplished by the Renaissance. With the founding of the first Basilica of S. Peter by Constantine begins that introduction of new arrangements into the buildings, necessitated by the altered conditions of worship, which gradually caused the abandonment of classic uses, and led on to the development of the new schools of Romanesque, Byzantine and Gothic Architecture; whilst the consecration by Pope Urban the Eighth of the new Basilica, in 1626, marks the close of that brilliant epoch, after which Architecture ceased to be a living, progressive art, and began only to copy forms of other periods and varying schools as the fashion of the period or as the wealth or taste of a patron might dictate.

The history of the rise and fall of the Gothic schools has been often described, and nowhere so completely as in the pages of Fergusson's 'Handbook of Architecture'; but no writer has yet attempted to present in sequent and chronological order an account of works simultaneously in progress in different countries; hence confusion often arises, through certain styles or phases of styles, being regarded as successive instead of as concurrent. The value of careful and critical descriptions of a building is often much impaired in this absence of definite dates, which prevents a reader from being able properly to appreciate or understand them; whilst to any one engaged in the study of the history of any particular place, period or building, this lack of chronological information is acutely felt.

Some years ago the Author began to compile the following tables of architectural and archeological dates for his own purposes, and the value they have proved to him in the course of his own study and research has induced him to make them available for the use of others. No such tables, professing to be anything like complete, have as yet been published, although numerous small lists and tables of dates have appeared in some of the leading works on Architecture and Archeology; but these are either confined to limited periods, or to peculiar styles and localities, or else are too condensed or superficial to be of general value. All such lists, however, so far as they relate to the period to which this work is limited, have been included herein and form the nucleus of the whole work; and the obligations of the Author for their employment are acknowledged in the list of the authorities given at the end of the volume. Apart from these several tables, the dates given herein have been derived from very varied sources. Some few have been found in the published chronicles of monastic foundations; very many—and these are of great importance—are from dates affixed to the buildings themselves; but by far the greater number are from monographs or communications made to and published in the Transactions of the various Architectural and Archeological Societies.

In preparing these tables, every endeavour has been made to secure accuracy by testing, as far as possible, the adequacy of the authority quoted, particularly when any discrepancy seemed to be involved; but in some few cases, where writers of high and equal repute have given dates, apparently contradictory, it has been thought better to publish these as they stand, leaving to future investigation the explanation of the difficulty. Such seeming contradictions are frequently, however, only due to some confusion in the descriptions given in the original documents themselves, or the way in which they have been understood—as, for instance, the "founding" of an establishment is often accepted as synonymous with the laying of the structural foundations, or the dedication of an altar or partial consecration of a church is taken to be evidence of its completion. As an example of this confusion, the records of the Cathedral of Upsala, in Sweden, may be given. In 1258 the Bull was issued for its foundation; but it was not until two or three years afterwards that the works to the building were actually commenced. These had, however, so far advanced in 1273, that we find the bones of S. Erik were removed into the new church from the older building at Gamla Upsala. Nevertheless, in 1287 a French architect was sent for to design a building similar to Notre Dame, in Paris. There is no recorded evidence of what he did or of what was done to the building for many years afterwards; but it is certain that it was not until 1435 that the building was actually consecrated.

The Inscriptions remaining on buildings or their furniture and fittings are of a diversified character, but they may generally be relied upon as giving unmistakeable evidence of the exact date they record. Such inscriptions, as those of Clee Church and Great Bookham (Page xxv) in England, and those of the South Portal of Notre Dame, Paris, and the great Portal of Strasburg Cathedral, are perfectly definite; whilst the very frequent examples to be found in late work of dates affixed to the vaulting of churches, such as those of Ulm, Ratisbon, and Linköping, if they do not fix exactly the time of the actual work, generally determine the period of its completion. Other inscriptions, such as those frequently found on the accessories of a building, recording the name of some founder or donor, although giving no actual date, often enable us to fix it within very narrow limits. Such, for example, as those on the western doors of the Cathedral of Le Puy-en-Velay, or the Candlestick in the Chapel of the Holy Nail at Bamberg (Pages 1 and 267).

To give a clear idea of the manner in which architectural art progressed through the epoch contained in the following tables, as various styles proceeded along parallel lines, a short synoptical table has been given, as an introduction, showing the characteristics of the several periods and styles together with their duration and locality. From this table become more apparent than any other mode of description would render possible, the variations in the art proceeding at the same time in different provinces: how for long a style or characteristic abandoned in one country retained its vitality in another; or how, in many cases, a perfect but purely local style died out before the greater wealth or influence of a neighbouring state.

It is not unlikely that the numerous archeological publications of late years afford all the definite information we are likely to obtain from such sources; but much, doubtless, remains to be discovered from unpublished inscriptions still remaining in buildings themselves. Beyond this, however, until the British Museum contains all the local histories published, and until these have been thoroughly examined by the archeological student, a vast amount of information must remain hidden away from the general reader, and a work of this character still be incomplete; but the Author has considered it better to issue these tables at once, whatever their omissions or imperfections may be, rather than indefinitely to wait for an almost impossible completeness.

INTRODUCTORY SYNOPTICAL TABLE

of the several characteristics which distinguished the various periods of Western Architectural Art from the decay of Roman Classical styles until the rise of the Renaissance. The examples given and their dates are mainly taken from 'Fergusson's Handbook.'

From 300 to 500.

Imitation of older Roman forms, in which the column and the cornice were the ornamental features chiefly used, and the arch and dome were essential portions in the construction. A large proportion of the buildings were erected with the remains of older edifices. Examples :—

4th century.	Rome.	S. Peter.
	,,	S. Paul.
5th century.	,,	Sta. Sabina.
	,,	Sta. Maria Maggiore.
	,,	S. Pietro in Vincoli.
	Constantinople.	S. Johannes.

From 500 to 800.

The imitation of Roman details and the re-use of ornamental features, such as capitals and shafts, still continues, but the columns are applied to constructional rather than ornamental uses. The cornice remains as a crowning feature to the walls, or bent round the arches as an ornament. The architrave is omitted altogether, or a small piece is left only as a block above the capitals. The arches become of increased importance, and are used in arcades. There is a general return to the Doric or convex form of capital, the ornament thereon being incised. Local influences begin to modify the older forms, and the commencement of the different schools becomes evident. Examples :—

6th century.	Ravenna. S. Apollinare Nuovo.
	Constantinople. S. Sophia.
	Ravenna. S. Apollinare in Classe.
	Parenzo. Duomo.
	Rome. S. Lorenzo.
	Salonica. S. Demetrius.
7th century.	Rome. Sta. Balbina.
	„ Sta. Agnese.
	„ Quattro Coronati.
	„ S. Giorgio in Velabro.
8th century.	„ S. Crisogono.
	Romain-Motier.
	Rome. Sta. Maria in Cosmedin.
	„ S. Vicenzo alle tre fontana.
	Constantinople. Sta. Irene.

From 800 to 1000.

The imitation of older forms still continues, but in a lesser degree, and distinctly defined schools such as the Lombardic in Italy and the Byzantine in the East have appeared. The round arch is used in all styles, but with greater variety in its treatment than hitherto, and arches are used in arcading and panelling as ornamental accessories. The cornice is only used as a string course or on the top of walling; the architrave block has become absorbed in the abacus, and the convex form of the cap has become general. The columns are gradually being replaced by built piers, or are only used as angle shafts or for ornamental purposes. Examples :—

9th century.	Rome.	S. Praxede.
	,,	Sta. Maria in Domenica.
	,,	S. Clemente.
	Alet, France.
	Germigny, France.
10th century.	Rome.	S. Bartolommeo in Isola.
	,,	S. Giovanni Laterano.
	Neufchatel.	Notre Dame.
	Gernrode Church.
	Salonica.	S. Bardias.

From 1000 to 1100.

Continuance of the Romanesque style in Italy and the Byzantine style in the East coincident with the use of distinct round-arched styles in France, Germany, and England. Examples :—

1000–1025.

England.	France.	Germany.	Italy.	The East.

CASTLE, ABO, FINLAND.

DESCRIPTION OF PLATES.

The following plates, from sketches by the Author, have been inserted as examples of the manner in which the recorded dates of buildings, &c., have frequently been preserved:—

Frontispiece.—The Savelli Tomb in the right-hand transept of Sta. Maria in Ara Cœli, Rome. The lower portion is an ancient Sarcophagus, and the design of the upper part is ascribed to Giotto. The date of the inscription to Luca Savelli is 1266.

Page ix.—Letters from MSS. in Durham Cathedral Library. The Capital P is from Jerome on Isaiah, dated about 1080, and the smaller letters are from Pudsey's Bible in four volumes, dated about 1170.

Page xiii.—A Capital from the church of S. Hilaire, Poitiers, consecrated in 1049.

Page xxi.—The Castle of Abo, Finland, built of hewn granite in 1300.

Page xxv.—An inscribed Stone let into the east wall of S. Nicholas Great Bookham, Surrey, recording the building of the chancel by Abbot Rutherykhe in 1341.

Page xxvii.—The Grande Place at Furnes, Flanders. The Belfry in the rear dated 1628. In front, the Hôtel de Ville, begun in 1596. At the side, the Choir of S. Walburge, begun about 1320.

Page 1.—One Panel from the western doors of the Cathedral of Le Puy-en-Velay. The meeting rail bears the inscription "Gaulfredus : me : fct : Petrus : epi" supposed to refer to a Bishop Peter, consecrated in 1043 at Ravenna. (G. E. Street.)

Page 203.—One of the Gate Towers of Constanz, called the "Schnezthor," and dated 1459.

Page 205.—Font from the church of Finnekumla, Vestergotland, Sweden, now preserved in the Museum, Gothenburg, with Runic inscription, translated "Andreas made."

Page 207.—A Doorway in the town house of the Browne family or tribe in Galway. It is in the half Spanish style peculiar to the place, and is dated 1554.

Page 265.—Brass Lectern from the church of S. Stephen, S. Albans, bearing the inscription, "Georgius Creighton episcopus Dunkeldensis." He was Bishop of Dunkeld from 1527 to 1544, and previously Abbot of Holyrood.

Page 267.—The upper part of a Candlestick, preserved in the Chapel of the Holy Nail in Bamberg Cathedral. The Herman mentioned in the inscription on the rim, which runs thus, "Supplicis Hermanni donis placare decani Sidus in arce poli prelucens sancti glori," was Dean of S. Michael's from 1123 to 1147.

Page 284.—Inlaid Marble ornament from a flat tomb in S. Croce, Florence, to Andrea Guardio, and dated 1472.

Page 285.—One of two Renaissance Capitals on the south of the chancel of Old S. Luke's Church, Chelsea, in the Chapel known locally as Sir Thomas More's. It bears the date of 1528, and is supposed to be the work of one of the associates of Torrigiano.

Page 287.—Second bell from S. Mary, Chester-le-Street, Durham, inscribed: "Dominus Johannes Lumley me fecit fieri hec campana pie datur hic in honore Marie." There was a Baron John Lumley 1405–1421.

Page 290.—Shields over the great gate of Bodiam Castle, Sussex, built in 1386. The arms are: in the centre, Sir Edward Dalyngruge, the founder; to the right Wardedieu, the arms of the heiress to Bodiam, wife of Dalyngruge, and to the left Bodiam.
